Guide to Golf Courses

Volume 2 – The Americas (winter destinations)

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

TOM DOAK is one of golf 's most critically acclaimed designers, with 35 courses to his credit including Pacific Dunes in Oregon, Cape Kidnappers in New Zealand, and The Renaissance Club in Scotland. His client list includes some of the most exclusive clubs in the world.

While a student at Cornell and then as an apprentice to architect Pete Dye, Tom visited hundreds of the world's best courses to learn his craft, including a year's stint in Great Britain & Ireland immediately after college.

Tom has written three books:

The Anatomy of a Golf Course (1991), a detailed description of the art and science of golf course architecture, now in its 15th printing by Burford Books. The Life and Work of Dr. Alister MacKenzie (1998), a biography of the legendary designer Alister MacKenzie and his courses, and The Confidential Guide to Golf Courses, the first version of which was printed for 40 of his friends in 1988, and later published by Sleeping Bear Press in 1996. Copies of the previous edition have been selling online for hundreds of dollars since the book went out of print 15 years ago.

THE GOURMET'S CHOICE

Although we envision this book being used mostly as a quick reference check to decide what courses to see in your travels, we cannot resist the temptation to break out a few of our favorite courses and write a bit more about what makes them special to us.

Instead of producing yet another list of "greatest" courses that includes all the usual suspects, The Gourmet's Choice highlights some of our favorite courses: the places that stir our souls, and will reward the visitor with something out of the ordinary. In the original world-wide edition of The Confidential Guide, there were 31 flavors, in honor of the wisdom of ice cream makers Baskin and Robbins; six of those are included in this volume of the book, though for variety's sake, I have only reprised one review, that of Shadow Creek in Las Vegas.

In choosing our favorites, we've tried to maximize variety, and spread the praise around to all sections of the Americas. There are flat courses and hilly ones; tropical courses and temperate ones; courses opened in 1920 and 2010. There are two PGA Tour venues, and one course that tips out at less than 5,000 yards. Each course is the work of a different architect, to ensure that we don't play favorites, even if we have them.

I'm not sure which fact is more impressive: that our selection includes five courses built since the publication of the last Confidential Guide [Diamante, El Potrerillo de Larreta, Sand Hollow, Streamsong, and Wolf Point], or that it includes five that weren't that great twenty years ago, but have since been transformed by sensitive restorations [Audubon Park, the Cal Club, L.A. Country Club, Old Town, and Yeamans Hall].

One thing I forgot to mention in the previous edition of the book is that the ! and ? marks on the scorecards are chess notation: ! is a great hole, !! or !!! are among the best holes in the world, ? is an odd or questionable hole, and ?! is an odd hole that turned out brilliant, in our view.

Here, then, are the 18 courses we've selected -- the courses we would take a good friend to play:

Audubon Park, New Orleans, LA
California Golf Club of San Francisco, CA
Cypress Point, CA

Diamante (Dunes), Cabo San Lucas, Mexico
Kapalua (Plantation), Maui, HI
Los Angeles CC (North), CA

Mid Ocean, Bermuda
Old Town Club, Winston-Salem, NC
Peachtree, Atlanta, GA

El Potrerillo de Larreta, Cordoba, Argentina
Sand Hollow, Hurricane, UT
Seminole, Juno Beach, FL

Shadow Creek, Las Vegas, NV
Streamsong (Blue), FL
Teeth of the Dog, Dominican Republic

Tobacco Road, Sanford, NC
Wolf Point, La Hood, TX
Yeamans Hall, Charleston, SC

El Potrerillo de Larreta

Alta Gracia, Cordoba, ARGENTINA

The history of several of our most famous courses (Pine Valley, Merion, Pebble Beach) is of a single-minded individual who found the right property and set out to create a special golf course. In most cases, this narrative has been streamlined; these courses would never have been as great as they are if George Crump, Hugh Wilson and Jack Neville hadn't had a lot of experienced help, either during the process or immediately afterward. It's one thing to envision a great course, but another to get it built to the highest standard.

A new entry in this category is El Potrerillo de Larreta, built by architect Ignacio Zuberbuhler and his sons on their grandfather's estate in the foothills of the Sierras, southwest of the city of Cordoba. Though they did have the help of two Argentine designers, Angel Reartes and Marcos Capdepont, the Zuberbuhlers were instrumental in the routing of the course and even shaped the greens and bunkers themselves. For better and for worse, the course is a family design as much as any I've seen.

The course works because the estancia is an almost perfect piece of land for golf. There are several valleys just wide enough for a fairway to run between the hills, and they merge together as they run to the lower part of the property to provide a good transition from one to another without having to climb up and over the ridges in between. This is one of the most natural routings I've seen.

Indeed, I like the routing of the course so much that I can overlook the fact that the greens shaping and bunkering adds nothing at all to the course ... it is the only course listed among our favorites here that doesn't have an excellent set of greens. If it did, it would be one of the best courses in the world, instead of just one of the best in South America.

The course works, too, because the Zuberbuhlers are very good golfers, and they were excited rather than repelled by all of the forced carries over streams that would be required by the ground ... fourteen times all told! Most architects would have told them to soften this aspect of the course, which makes it quite difficult for the lesser player, but instead the family embraced the challenge and made that part of the course's character. Indeed, the entrance to the property is by a beautiful small waterfall just below the confluence of the two main streams at the bottom end of the property.

The golfer first encounters the water at the long 2nd, where both the drive and the approach must carry a rushing stream; and three other long holes [the 6th, 8th and 11th] follow this same general description, two of them playing downgrade, and two back up. At the difficult par-4 10th, one is asked to carry a stream just in front of the green, or to lay up to a fairway in a small loop of the creek, forming a 100-yard island on the approach.

The 10th is one of many greens defended by small streams through the property.

The streams are also the centerpiece of the two best short holes on the course [of which there are five, to go with five par-5's]. At the 3rd, one climbs up to a tee to play across a stream which then wraps the left side of the green; the 7th is more of an island green, where the dammed stream guards the right front of the green, which is shoved up against the steep bank of the valley at its left. There is a beautiful waterfall where the pond ends, but you appreciate it once you leave the green, en route to the next tee.

The old homestead, built in 1924, has recently been converted to a boutique hotel. Sitting above a bend of the stream valley overlooking the green of the par-3 7th, the estancia has a variety of courtyards, cozy corners, and outdoor sitting areas, plus its own small chapel. It is one of the most comfortable retreats one could hope to find, and it would likely be the first place I'd take my wife if I go back to Argentina someday, secure in the knowledge that the golf course wouldn't be too hard for her ... because she doesn't play the game. - TD

COURSES IN ORDER OF DOAK SCALE RATING

I have included this feature in the book because so many readers have asked for it. We do not intend it as a "ranking" of courses in any way. Courses are listed according to my grade first, and then according to the average grade from the four of us.

While the book gives the impression that the four of us think alike, you will see below that 60% of the time, my co-authors disagree with my rating for a course, but seldom by more than one point. In many of those cases, a lower rating is outdated after the renovation of a course; in the rest, just assume they're wrong!
